Fountain of Hope

Every coin creates a ripple

Water is the symbol of life.
 It renews, purifies, cleanses and heals.
 It flows gracefully around obstacles and joyfully over precipices. And while it may become a snowflake for a time, or a gentle mist, it always returns to water.

Water holds a special meaning for William J. "Bill" Moore, who donated this Fountain of Hope to Providence Cancer Center in memory of his wife of 50 years, Rosemary Moore.

On one of their last trips together, Rosemary grinned broadly and tossed a coin over her shoulder into Rome's famed Trevi Fountain. Rosemary, who was treated for cancer at Providence Portland Medical Center, died two years later, in July 2003.

Today, the Fountain of Hope stands in honor of Rosemary Moore and the thousands of other lives touched by cancer.

Rosemary and William J. "Bill" Moore

Bill Moore, a cancer survivor himself and a board member for Providence Portland Medical Foundation, encourages visitors to make a gift in memory of their loved ones and in the hope of finding a cure.

Each coin has the potential to create a ripple. Your gift can help the Foundation fund life-saving research.

And if you see a glistening 50-cent piece, that one's from Bill ... for Rosemary.
